Welcome

It's been a great start to 2015. We are truly proud of our children and what they have accomplished. As seen in our last newsletter, we set some really ambitious goals for this year. Thus far, we have met the majority of them.

New Site

Words from a Childlike Heart will soon have a new look and feel. Our site will be more appealing and have several wonderful features that have been added or improved:

Parent Pointers

We are happy to partner with several parents who made the decision to write for our column. At this time, we are still open to submissions. If you are interested, please read our guidelines and forward your articles to us. We are learning a lot from each other and want to continue building our network. ## My Family and I Are Entitled to be Alone

I've heard the verse John 14:2-2-4 and I've always just thought about the return of Christ. Well, when I learned the relevance of this passage, I had a whole new understanding.

In Biblical times, when a man asks a woman to marry him, the woman goes back to her family and...waits, and waits and waits. The man returns to his family's home and begins to prepare a place for the two of them. Their home is just a room attached to other rooms, where several generations of family live. Only the man's father can say when the room the man is building is sufficient. Neither the man nor the woman knows when he will receive the blessing to officially take her as his wife.

So, really, no one knows what the wedding date will be. (Could you imagine that in this day and age...deposits, photographers...I would have needed him to build for at least 9 months). Once the father gives his approval, the man is free to go to the woman, marry her and bring her to their new home. So in Biblical times, newly married and those married for decades were never on their own. Families, mothers, fathers, children all had the support of the community. These families were in daily fellowship.
